PROHIBITION ISSUE LOOMS AS OUTSTANDING PROBLEM IN 1924 PRESIDENTIAL RACE

West Baden and White House Conferences Reveal Acute Situation, Both Washington Observers and Governors Agree-Support Is Pledged to President

Coolidge Program Calling for Nation-Wide Mobilization of Forces to Combat Wet Propaganda and Lawless Elements Adopted by Chief Executives

By a Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Oct. 22-Prohibition is looked upon as the principal issue in the 1924 presidential race by a majority of the 36 governors who discussed dry law enforcement with President Coolidge Saturday and who adopted a dry platform of their own at a conference earlier in the week. They base this opinion, they admit, on developments at these conferences. They point to the fact that while other subjects were up for debate, either at West Baden or at the White House, the argument always reverted to prohibition and its POLICY TO ADVANCE enforcement.

Further to substantiate their declaration they point to their acceptance of the Coolidge program which they say, in itself, is indicative of the imsay, in itself, is indicative of the importance of the dry issue. This program includes "six points" offered at the White House parley by President Coolidge and "one point" advanced by Gov. J. A. O. Preus of Minnesota. They follow:

They follow:

1. Co-ordination of all federal, state, county and municipal forces.

2. To call upon the press to support prohibition law enforcement, stress law observance, and treat the enforcement program commensurate with the gravity of lawlessness.

3. To call conventions of municipal, county and state enforcement officials at a convenient date, to discuss and adopt a pregram for the State, the Federal Government pledging every possible support to there conventions.

4. To call upon the prosecuting attorneys in the various dispricts of the State to confer on this problem, pledging support with every facility to aid in such discussions.

5. To adopt whatever means are practicable to cause lawless citizens and sallens to respect the majesty and sanctity of the law, and to respect the various agencies enforcing it.

6. Co-operation by national authorities in all these activities.

7. Education of the school children as to the evils of liquor.

"back home" the truth of the situation. Immediate action, they point out, means bringing this issue to the very battlefront at the time when the Nation is to elect a President. Observers at the Capital join with the chief executives in the belief that prohibition will be the "big issue" in 1924. Leaders say it is right that it should be. To use a political expression, they say, "It is time for a showdown."

This is the prevailing situation here following the governors' conference.

More Rigid Regulation

Governor Pinchot of Pensylvania started for home yesterday, declaring that prohibition enforcement needs more rigid federal regulation, and not merely the tactics of the policy of per-suasion which, in his view, were out-lined by the President at the Gover-Conference Saturday. CURRENCY PROJECT; CRITICISM GROWING

Economic Expert Says Proposed Remedy for Unemployment in Great Britain Is Useless

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, Oct. 22-The reception to the proposal for a change in the Brit-Government's financial policy in the direction of currency inflation has the direction of currency inflation has been such that the representative of The Christian Science Monitor understands that the original scheme is now considerably modified. Sir Eric Geddes is to deal with this matter in an address on behalf of the Federation of British Industries at Glasgow tomorrow. Meanwhile the volume of criticism continues to grow.

The Financial Times says:

The Financial Times says:

A conservative economic expert, Harold Cox, in the Sunday Times, meanwhile, describes the proposed remedy for unemployment as a "quack" remedy. His argument is somewhat as follows: the inflation to be of use to the manufacturer must be continuous since the moment rates. 30 countries, and which win through the week.

In an interview for The Christian Science Monitor, Dr. William O. Stillman, president of the American Humane Association, outlined the need for a humane training college, which he hopes to have established at Alhany for the instruction of humane hany for the instruction of humane when the exchange was lower. The math once entered upon, therefore, is not through the world. path once entered upon, therefore, is a downward one and there is no saying at what level it should cease.

That the increase in prices it brings about may mean temporarily increasing profits to a particular group of manufacturers is not denied, but it does not follow that this means in-creased trade for the Nation as a whole. The home consumer is not going to enhance his purchases be-cause prices are raised. On the other cause prices are raised. On the other hand, it may be true that more foreign markets might be captured if British Labor were paid in a progressively depreciating currency, which deprived it of part of the value of the wages it receives. If this be the only object in view however, it can be selvered. in view, however, it can be achieved without discouraging saving or tampering with currency by the much simpler expedient of an agreement between Capital and Labor to work at lower costs. This is precisely, the Monitor representative learns, where the difficulty comes in. British Labor at present regards anything of the kind with the most intense suspicion. The Daily Herald, its principal organ in the press; is now concentrating upon the inadequacy of the Government's proposals for provision of winter work. The Daily Chronicle, representing the National Liberals, takes a similar line and talks about the "flasco of winter and talks about the "flasco of winter work schemes."

This is one of the questions to which Stanley Baldwin, the Premier, has to give an answer next Thursday at the Nationalist Unionists' Association meeting at Plymouth. He is also to deal with the political situation generally, including what has been happening in Germany. The Times happening in Germany. The Times forecasts that he will support an extension of existing imperial preferences, and will emphasize the need for a certain measure of protection against the dumping of foreign steel, but on this last-named matter no authoritative information is yet available. thoritative information is vet avail-

BREAK-UP OF GERMAN EMPIRE NOW VISUALIZED BY FRANCE

If Reich Crumbles, Rhine Republic Recognition Will Follow Shortly-Attitude of Great Britain Uncertain

By Special Cable

PARIS, Oct. 22-The break-up of Germany has begun. Saxony domi-nated by the Communists, Socialists in grave opposition to the Reich, Bavarian militarists and Monarchists in revolt against Berlin, the Ruhr Valley cut off by the French, and now a Rhineland Republic set up in the Bel gian zone of occupation and quickly spreading to the whole of the French and British zones. The gravest ques-tion which arises after the proclamation of a separate republic is what will happen if the French favor this move-ment of independence and the British

It is believed here that the British in the Cologne zone will not endeavor to check the progress of the new régime; first, because some of the British recognize this as the solution of a number of difficulties, and, second, because the British troops in ond, because the British troops in Cologne are so few that they could

But what is almost inevitable is that the French Government will recognize the Republic at an early date if it is consolidated, while the British, who are opposed to any policy of the disof Germany, will not recog-

As the French and British are side main on good terms with them since side on the Rhine, an extremely they depend for protection against the kward situation would arise. An Reich on the occupying authorities. As the French and British are side by side on the Rhine, an extremely awkward situation would arise. An unpleasant quarrel which would in-crease the separation of the two countries might result. While the procla-mation of a republic was not unexpected in Paris, it is strenuously de-nied that the French Government had any hand in its preparation.

Recently France has been accused y its enemies and by its former allies of having deliberately written off rep-arations and is aiming merely at the destruction of Germany. This destruc-tion would be brought about by civil strife and anarchy in the unoc regions, while the occupied regions would detach themselves from the Reich and seek French friendship. As France controls the Rhineland and Ruhr it is obvious that they could these circumstances for an indefinite period and make special arrangement with the inhabitants while moring Berlin.
It should be said immediately that there is no truth in such assertions respecting deep-laid and machiavellian French plans. The simple fact is that France has no plan and the Government is bitterly enough criticized here because it is at the mercy of cir-

Policy of a Harmless Germany What is true & that if the prospect of reparations, which are badly needed, disappeared then France might be content with the second-best policy of a harmless Germany. But in spite of a few partisans, such as General Mangin, the idea of a Rhineland Re-Mangin, the idea of a Rhineland Republic has never made much progress in France. Vaguely, it has been regarded as a possibility which is not entirely displeasing. But Dr. Derten and Herr Smeets and other leaders have received no encouragement here. Dr. Dorten in expounding his views to The Christian Science Monitor representative a little while ago in Paris, complained that he could not obtain even to welcome it the Government did not wish to be compromised. The position is that the country can re-joice in the events without being re-sponsible for having provoked them.

France to Keep the Ring

France will keep the ring in the Rhineland and will not allow the German police to brutally suppress the movement. The moment it becomes clear that the Rhineland republic is sufficiently powerful to set up a government, it will be recognized by the French. So far it is not recorded that the movement has spread far the movement has spread far that the movement has sprea leader, but it is regarded as certain that within a few days the entire occupied region will be under the flag of the Separatists.

Troops are understood to be march ing on Cologne. It is difficult to con-ceive that there will be any clash with the British Army. France and Belgium have, it is believed, issued orders to prevent any attacks either on German police or by the police. If Germany sends men into this zone, direct hos-tilities with France might ensue. The outlook therefore is grave, but in Paris the prospect of fighting is dismissed. The Rhinelanders will not turn their arms against the French, but will re-to raise 70,000 troops. About their disregarded while in neighboring success there is now hardly any doubt.

modo esotico" is ultra impressionistic and not altogether agreeable music. Its dissonances startle when first heard but it would hardly seem that once the novelty of the piece has worn off, it will be of lasting interest. It is a composition typical of much music of the present day, music which depends for its main effects on the element of surprise. The remainder of the program was made up of familiar, though none the less interesting music.

Mr. Ganz's playing of Brahms almost makes the music of this composer seem planistic. If Brahms we must have, by all means let us have it played by Mr. Ganz. The same may be said of Schumann's F sharp minor Sonata, a work of many beauties, but have humane education laws. The present conference will act to widen these laws and secure their adoption by all states. The conference marks the passage of the "Magna Charta" for the anima world, secured largely through the efforts of Richard Martin of Galway, Parliament in 1822. This organization, while denouncing the organization, while denouncing the Klan, holds that no good can come from trying to prevent its lawful assemblage. In this respect the view of the New England Civil Liberties Union, whose chairman, John S. Codman, recently took up the point with Mayor Curley, is upheld.

of the University of Michigan, praised The Christian Science Monitor as a newspaper that could be placed in the hands of children without parents first looking through it to see if it contained something not fit to be read. Mr. Martin added:

At a conference of newspaper workers at the University of Missouri last June, a letter was read from a woman to an editor, just such a letter as all editors often receive, saying: "I would like to take at least one newspaper with the assurance that. I could let my children read it without first looking it over to see if it contains some story they should not read."

This well-intentioned indictment is very common. Now there is a paper in Boston, The Christian Science Monitor, that is just that kind of paper. Its editors are endeavoring to make it a national newspaper. It has 8000 or 10,000 circulation in Europe, and I believe about 80,000 in the United States. It is distinctly a high-class paper, which such good mothers can give to their children.

Shelving of Belgian Reparations Plan by Commission Expected

PARIS, Oct. 22-The documents outining Belgium's attitude toward the reparations problem, commonly referred to as "the Belgian plan," are regarded in well-informed circles as having been shelved by the Reparations Commission, to which they were submitted. The commission followed its usual order of procedure in refer-ring the documents to financial ex-perts, but it is remarked that they had already been in the hands of the various delegations for weeks and had undergone ample study.

The British, though finding some excellent suggestions in the documents are unable to approve them, it is said since they involve practical recognition of the legality of the Franco-Belgian occupation of the Ruhr, and the members of the commission long ago came to the conclusion that there was nothing to be gained in taking

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 22 (Special)—"I believe Governor Phonto is altogether right is saying that no adequate attempt has been made by officers of the Federal Government to enforce the prohibition laws," said the Rev. F. E. Johnson, research director of the Federal Council of Churches, today at a social service institute of the National Congregational Council.

"The law suffers in too many cases by not being in the hands of its friends," he continued. "The liquor evil is perpetuated not by degenerates and criminals, but by judges and lawyers in our higher courts, whose sense of legal propriety is not violated by the flow of rum at their meetings. The main problem is not one of enforcement but of fundamental social education. There are places wet as swamps, but they cannot be dried at once.

A world court seems urgently necessary. An international association of nations for the common peace and good will is justly favored. But there are two things in particular that I wish to streas as imperative if this much-needed good will is to become universal. One is the complete co-operation of America in world affairs. The second point concerns the part sustained by the church. When it comes to an organization that is world-wide in scope, the church stands alone. The issue we are to meet is essentially and vitally a celligious and moral issue. No League of Nations, no power of treaty can fully astafy and alieviate the streas of his emergency. Dr. Aurelia H. Reinhardt Forecasts World Peace Through International Mindedness

International peace, brought about through international mindedness to which modern transportation, the American system of education, the printed word and the radio are strong contibutors, and in which the educated woman is a powerful factor, was the theme of an interview and two addresses given today by Dr. Aurelia Henry Reinhardt, president of the American Association of University Women and also president of Mills College, Cal., who is now an honored guest in Boston.

Dr. Reinhardt came to the city as a delegate to the inauguration of Dr. Ada L. Comstock as president of Rad-Ada L. Comstock as president of Rad-cliffe College last Saturday. At noon today she was honor guest at a lunch-eon given by the Boston League of Women Voters at the Copley Plaza Hfotel. Later today she was given a reception by the Boston branch of the American Association of University Women at the home of Mrs. S. Burt Wolbach on Beacon Street. World peace is a dominant thought with Dr. Reinhardt, notable in great measure in all her work. all her work.
"Some people are so narrow-minded

"Some people are so narrow-minded they make me think of those ancient peoples whose thought of the horizon was a snake with its tail in its mouth," said Dr. Reinhardt to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor. "But three things are now making for national-mindedness among us. One is transportation. One roads on the western coast we our roads on the western coast we saw last summer automobiles from Maine, from Texas, from almost every state in the Union. I could tell you of boys who had worked their way over the continent in little old cars. They were seeing the country. They had seen the Sierras, they had seen the Rockies, they had seen our plains and our deserts with their own eyes.

It was only about 75 years ago tha Marcus Whitman who went into the morthwest territory as a missionary to the Indians for the Congregational Church, brought back his own wagon wheel to the capitol at Washington to prove that a wagon could penetrate to those regions. Thus we are beginning to have geographical information and knowledge because of modern transportation.

Another important thing is our much maligned system of education. In one day at Radcliffe College I met 12 young people from California. Their thoughts have been expanded by education. Through our educational in-stitutions and the freedom with which our young people go to one or the other of them we are giving our young people an optimism and progressive-ness of great value to the world as a whole, as well as to themselves.

"The third thing is a menace as well as a help. It is the accessibility of the printed word. Through it we reach the individual with truths By the side of the printed word we should place the radio. I, in Seattle, snound place the radio. I, in Seattle, last summer, through the radio, had word of the passing of our President, before the people of San Francisco had it, yet he was in San Francisco at the

But the baby of all—a small African elephant—15 months old, is, I think, next to the lion cubs, the most attractive young person in the has hung over 2200 paintings and re-productions in color well framed on the walls of schoolhouses, and has in-stalled 21 industrial art cabinets, one of which relates to the printing arts.

Recalling its birthday this autumn, its charter members speak of the in-spiration of the Fine Arts Building of the World's Fair and the sudden realization that children spent about ren rooms. A group of mothers from the Chicago Woman's Club organized the Public School Art Society, inviting congenial associates from other women's clubs, giving the society a city-wide interest. Naturally the discarded pictures from homes had drifted into schoolrooms, and by degrees the least of these made place for chosen pic-tures. Several model schools were from kindergarten to eighth grade with selected works bought from a bequest or a fund. Sculpture was placed in halls and niches that chil-dren entering might feel the interest of a St. George, King Arthur, Lincoln, Washington, or Joan of Arc in fine plaster copies. More than one school evolved a plan of its own. For example, the upper room hung-only original paintings, the next lower reproduc-tions of Venetian art, the next of Dutch, the next Italian, another American, and so the child in his advance-ment lives in different atmospheres of art, for all these schools and their teachers have great enthusiasms.

Popular Subjects

Visitors to the model collection are amazed at the popular character of the subjects. The paintings, "Leafy Screen," by Lucie Hartrath; "Beech Woods," by Edgar Cameron; "Taos Woods," by Edgar Cameron; "Taos Town," by Victor Higgins; "Gather-ing Grapes." by Marie Blanke; "Over the Hill," by Irma Kohn; "Michigan Avenue, Early Morning," by James R. Perry; "Sketch Class," by Pauline Palmer; "Wild Roses," by Karl A. Buehr, and "The North Sea," by Wil-liam Clusmann, have hung at the Art Institute.

There is to be seen a wholly new attitude to life and learning, and with that attitude a wholly new realization of our responsibilities to one another. Cheek by jowl on the benches of the summer school sit members of Parliament and working miners, peers and plowmen, old men and adolescents. The thing has moved in upon us with its whole household during the night. It has not been organized, it has grown. As the Prime Minister stated, when himself speaking at a summer school, it is the free spontaneous creation of the race. Whitehall had nothing to do with it, was even a little bit suspicious of it. It is therefore peculiarly English, or, to put it more accurately, it is a natural development of the independent spirit of the Anglo-Saxon. The same "genius" which created the public school is at work again on adult education. We as a people dislike compulsion and loathe centralization and have a healthy abhorrence of officials. Indeed it is part of the movement against the menace of bureaucracy.

ut it is in its effect on the teachers that its value is most certain. For while all sorts and conditions of men and women are flocking to the summer schools, the chief students are the teachers themselves. They have learnt sirability of expanding present courses that if they are to be "real" teachers they must be humble learners also. I in American history.

She sees in them an experiment that is going to transform primary education throughout Mexico. And "ojala," as her countrymen say, that her vision

The curriculum of the "new school" is based squarely on the needs of man, and first of all these needs come food and shelter.

The need for the terreno dictates that the schools must be situated on the outskirts of the city, but this in any case would be Miss Guzman's ideal. Intimate access to the open spaces, the unobstructed sweep of sky, the bird song, the miracle of tree and cornfield. Nothing shows what a change has come over the conception of education and the "education" of a teacher more than the rapid growth of these schools.

A visit to the Leon Tolstoy reveals the spirit of the new centers even better than a visit to one more nearly complete. A tangle of railroad tracks and railroad shops adds to the hideousness of the neighborhood in which it is unfolding—indeed the other long gray building of the barracks is used for railway storage. Later, however, Miss Guzman hopes to get possession of it as a dormitory for the hundreds of homeless or practically homeless children with which such a neighborhood abounds. Others, as I have said, besides teachers attend the schools. Now it is here that a notable advance can be made. There is not quite enough of the "others"—not a proper and adequate contingent of directors and secretaries of education, of inspectors, of "officials" from Whitehail. It were well that those who issue regulations and compile codes should come and learn side by side with those for whom they are issued. The interchange of ideas could not fail to be fruitful. It shelters little waifs ters that the reorganization which is of 3 and 4 who found their way "to be in the interests of both econthere clinging to the dirty rags of omy and efficiency" should disappear.

Responsibility

Each of the older children is responsible for the cultivation of his plot of ground and for the providing of his own food and clothing from the proceeds thereof. But they are all pathetically versed in the vicissitudes of human fortune. They have, therefore, various flourishing forms of mu-tual aid. If a child needs shoes, he seeks the bank where all deposit their surplus centavos. The loan, of course, must be scrupulously repaid, but the very handsome 10-year-old banquero in blue overalls is quite capable of look-ing out for that. To be present at a meeting of the self-government board of the school is to wonder why the world doesn't turn all its affairs over to its children-and what our congressmen and senators could have done with the dignity and intelligence which they too must have had at the age of these boys and girls. take to the score with avidity, for whatever the instrument he plays he will find it sooner or later divertingly engaged, in a way that makes the pranks of Till Eulenspiegel seem as conventional as a temple march in a Gluck opera. For example, when "Quiet for the Emperor!" is heraldically demanded before the triumphal entrance, it is accomplished by the full blare of a trombone falling away in rapid diminuendo to a sound between a sleeping-car snore and the bray of a donkey. Then a Chinese march is wanted, and it is made by the first violins larruping and chir-ruping against the tam-tam and the brasses. The Chinese studies of Eichheim seem to us to convey more of the uthentic atmosphere of Cathay.

heim seem to us to convey more of the authentic atmosphere of Cathay.

Lonely, wistful little cadenzas of the flute (fingered with consummate adroitness by Kincaid) were of course the bird outpouring its heart in ecstasy ere the gross mechanical rival came to supplant it. High violins and trumpets were the suitable annunciation of the visit of the Japanese Emperor to his royal neighbor; and it should be noted that Stravinsky is ruthless in looking to the trumpet for a violinistic flexibility. What Stokowski styled the "square, stiff" song of the mechanical bird was dextrously presented with the oboe in masal and rancous parody of the flute, and the pizzicato of the violins to simulate the internal ticking of the wheels. With so much ingenious contrivance, Stravinsky has incurred the danger which the mechanical nightingale itself has symbolized—that an elaborate and complicated apparatus, cleverly manipulated, may paratus, cleverly manipulated, may supersede the natural "unpremedi-tated art" of pure song and rapturous supersede the hauter and rapturous at the dart" of pure song and rapturous inspiration.

But certainly the compatriots were worlds apart in their idiom, as is seen if one puts the "Danse Chinoise" of the ballet suite beside the Chinese March of the symphonic poem. The two men are not thinking the same tonal terms, and Tschaikowsky would undoubtedly have asked, as an old painter might ask of a new one, whether the upstart meant to pour contempt on the learn-ing and the acquired technique of all schools before him.

Willy Burmester Plays

It means much in these days of scintillating brilliancy which is likely to dim the luster of more serious and substantial art to have an exponent of substantial art to have an exponent of the tender grace of a bygone day come before the public, in the person of Willy Burmester with his singing violin. There are younger and more facile executants, but nearly every one of his juniors would do well to give reverent heed to the obvious virtues of Burmester's art: He began his Philadelphia program (the earnest and capable Franz Rupp at the piano) with Beethoven's E flat major sonata, and reached the pith of his message and the hearts of his listeners with the limpid and deliberate setting-forth of the Adagio.

The sonata was illuminative of the The sonata was illuminative of the gifts and graces of the player. His atyle was compact of precision and elegance, avoiding the rigidity of the martinet or the slovenly license of the dilettante. He drew his bow across the strings half-way between the fingerboard and the bridge at an exact right angle and for a whole note used it all the way to the end. On the other hand, when he wanted a spiccate effect with the central two inches of the bouncing bow, his control was as com-

Lawrence Gliman gave five pages of perceptive and well-wrought exposition to the music in the program book, and Dr. Stokowski on the present occasion delivered a preparatory address with 10 illustrative excepts performed by the orchestra before he played the work as a whole. When the synthesis came, it took 20 minutes, and after about six of these minutes, that constant reiteration of mannered dissonances bred wearlness on the part of the audience, so that the reception of the work may fairly be described as lukewarms.

Here is a deal of machinery set in motion, to give verisimilitude to the favorite nursery tale of the Chinese Emperor who thought a mechanical bird might do as well as a live one, and who discovered and rued his error. At the start an atmosphere of fluttering expectancy for the Emperor's stately entrance is vividly conveyed in the pentatonic charivari of strings, muted trumpet, celesta, piano, harps and distracted wood-wind. To unsophisticated ears the most grateful portions of the music set those placid and lucid interfudes—sometimes after harsh, strident sequences and acrid dissonances—when the nighting allows of the fields of the program was a welcome and of the program was a velocome and of the program was a welcome and of the progra Weber's "Rural Dance" and Paganini's "Witches' Dance." "The impossibility of recreating any bygone art is as palpable as is the impossibility of duplicating any master printer's or master sculptor's work," Mr. Woollett notes. "The acts of creating and of copying are essentially dif-ferent. A copy in the realm of art is recognized as not having the true an art form long bound by tradition and limitations, he has introduced an innovation—has done something gen-its use especially in attempting to tell this story in a new building material—the language of form util-ized is necessarily the language in which all architectural form has which all architectural form has spoken in the past. It would be an unforgivable imposition nevertheless to cast an exact copy of a Greek temple, a Gothic cathedral or colonial house out of concrete. Some measure of intelligence must be exercised in adaptation, some imagination used.

"To indicate power and dignity, unbroken wall surfaces in this basic material would probably be sufficient, if in some subtle way to these areas should be added a hint of the ancient architecture. To spell the refinement and cultural values that we have inherited, the balanced fineness of Greek molds and columns will suffice. Bernard R. Maybeck, who designed the buildings of the San Francisco Exposition in 1915, recently inspected the newest Los Angeles theater.

Among other things, Mr. Maybeck said: "The architect of Grauman's Metropolitan is from his own confes sion in concrete, a product of our West. He is a mirror of the desert, the mountains covered with sagebrush, which are always before his eyes in Los Angeles. The Western Indian has put his stamp upon his art, and the Oriental has added his exuberant admixture. All these influences are felt in the Grauman Theater. Here is a new art, if art can be new. Or rather it is a creation, not a copy of this or that in a pure style The architect has taken the bare concrete forms as they are required for the support of balconies, floors and roofs, and without plastering or fake architectural construction, he has recognized as not having the true value of an original, and rightly so. By the same token, architecture worked up in the spirit of another age lacks the essential art values of original or creative work.

The time limit of 5½ hours expired before the vessels had completed the 31-mile course set for the trial, but in the 19 miles raced the Columbia gained as many minutes on the Ford in light airs, weather regarded by fishermen as the Ford's chance. With daylight falling, the time almost exhausted and the Columbia miles ahead, the Ford and the Elizabeth Howard, the second trial schooner, defaulted and sailed for Gloucester.

Any complaint that the schedules of Harvard and Princeton for 1922 were not heavy enough, whether justified or not, can selected for those two colleges for 1923 as to date they have had all they could very wall handle and more hard games are in the offing. Harvard showed considerable improvement in several departments of play Saturday when the Crimson defeated Holy Cross, $ to 0. In other departments the Crimson was far from hausted and the Columbia miles ahead, the Ford and the Elizabeth Howard, the second trial schooner, defaulted and sailed for Gloucester.

The elimination race, held at the eleventh hour because of the late arrival from the fishing grounds of Capt. Clayton Morrissey with the Ford, was staged, committee members explained, in order to give Captain Morrissey his fair chance. With the Ford he lost last year's international series to the Lunenburger Bluenose, although he defeated the Canadian schooner in two starts. He had defeated the Elizabeth Howard and the Shamrock in the Lipton Cup race in August, and it was felt that he had a right to his chance. Gloucester, while expressing regret at the defeat of Morrissey, hailed with delight the victory of Capt. Een Pine, who held the helm of the Columbia. In Gloucester opinion Pine has made possible America's continued participation in the annual fishermen's races.

When the Esperanto, which wen the first international series at Hailfax in 1920, was wrecked on Sable Island the next year, Captain Pine made possible Morrissey pile up on Sable Island. Last year the Ford lost to the Bluenose and then Pine and his associates built the Columbia to win the cup.

Whether he will command the Columbia at Hailfax is still a question. Under the strict rules governing the international event, Captain Pine may not qualify as a professional fisherman, his friends say, as he now spends his time in an office. If he is not eligible, it is said, that Capt. J. H. Larkin, skipper of the Boston schooner, Mayflower, will take charge of the American challenger.

The Columbia covered the distance of 19 miles in 18m. 40s, less time than the Ford. The Howard getting off to a bad start, gained on the Ford on several legs, as she did in the Lipton Cup race in August, but was unable to make up the early handicap.

Yale defeated Bucknell, 29 to 14, but the result can hardly be said to be pleasing to the followers of the Blue. Bucknell was not as strong as expected and Yale soon ran up a total of 14 points. This had 15 points added to it in the third period, while Bucknell scored a touchdown and a spoint in the third and fourth periods. The fact that Bucknell could score two touchdowns against Yale was far from satisfactory to Coach T. A. D. Jones and his men, and seems to indicate that Yale's lack of good guards and tackles is still serious. Yale's backfield will also have to make up for the loss of C. M. O'Hearn '24S, who will not be able to play again this season. As he was the best man in the backfield, and was chief punter and drop-kicker, big loss will be a serious one.

Pittsburgh Defense Strong

Pennsylvania won from Columbia by the rather one-sided score of 19 to 7.

The Red and Blue showed up much better than in its previous games, while Columbia seemed to realize that it was facing its first really big game of the season and failed to do its best work. Syracuse expected to win from Pittsburgh by a substantial margin, and the fact that a field goal by McBride gave the Orange the victory by only 3 to 0 was quite pleasing to the followers of Pittsburgh. Very strong defensive playing featured the game, with Pittsburgh making a brilliant stand on its one-yard line in the first five minutes of play.

QUEEN'S HAS GOOD CHANCE TO REPEAT

tercollegiate Football Title Again This Season

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 21 (Special)-Queen's University, Intercollegiate, and Canadian senior football champions last year, practically made certain of repeating in the college union here yesterday, when its team defeated that of the University of Taxantia 2 to 2 the University of Toronto, 9 to 3.

games on the schedule to play at home and, as in both games against McGill and Toronto the champions showed a that they will finish the league season without a defeat.

In yesterday's game the winners were, individually, considerably better than the locals, and the chief feature of the game was the small margin of victory.

In yesteriay's game the winners were, individually, considerably better than the locals, and the chief feature of the game was the small margin of victory.

Queen's fielded a team composed of all but two of last year's championship aggregation, and it showed a machine-like precision in putting its plays under way, and also showed an excellent interference which completely baffied the losers. This interference allowed the Queen's backs, P. Leadly and H. Batstone, to get around the ends for many good gains and the pair showed the best ground-gaining work of the season. The work of this pair, along with the defensive strength of the visitors' line, was the difference between the two teams. Every time the winners started a play the ball-carrier was well under way before being threatened by a local tackler and they made yards repeatedly. The locals had no interference to speak of and in addition were inexperienced, only five of the players being regulars last year.

Toronto was outplayed and outgeneraled by the winners, and the surprise of the game was that Queen's, who kept the play in Toronto's territory for three-quarters of the time, were unable to score finore than nine points, six of which came in the first period. On the play and the individual superiority of the winners they should have won by 20 points at least. The losers showed flashes of real defensive strength at times, particularly when Queen's threatened to cross their goal line and the winners several times lost possession on downs.

Toronto opened the scoring in the first period when H. Plaxton dropped a field goal from the 35-yard line, and a few minutes later he tried again from the 15-yard mark, but Queen's broke through and he failed to score. These two occasions were the only times the losers were within scoring distance of the winner's goal. Immediately after the second attempt Queen's broke through and he failed to score. These two occasions were the only times the losers were within scoring distance of the winners obtained two rouges, and in Saturday was a day of several long, brilliant runs by individual players. C. H. Terrill '26 of Rutgers snatched a victory for his team from New York University, by making an 80-yard run for a touchdown; G. W. Smythe of West Point made one run of 75 yards and another of 91 against Alabama Polytechnic Institute; J. M. Stifer Jr. '26 made one of 60 yards and I. E. Swaney '25 one of 40 for Brown against Boston University; Capt. E. A. Hammer '24 turned in a 95-yard run for Pennsylvania against Columbia and H. E. Wilson '24 of Penn State made runs of 50, 70 and 95 yards against Annapolis. The above are a few of the most prominent ones in the east.

J. M. Braden, former Yale star fullback who kicked a 52-yard goal against Harvard in the Stadium one year, is assistant football coach at University of Tulsa. It is stated that he is giving his services, as he desires to try for the United States Olympic team next summer.

Coach T. A. D. Jones appears to be having a hard time finding a strong rushallne at Yale. It is difficult to figure out how a line which Bucknell could penetrate for two touchdowns can very, successfully repulse teams of the strength of Princeton and Harvard.

Bowdoin and Colby are having a hard time trying to defeat each other, and it is 1921 since either succeeded. Saturday the score was 6 to 6, which is just the same result as they obtained in 1922.

When Cornell defeated Colgate Saturday it was the twentieth consecutive victory won by a Cornell eleven since Gilmore Doble took charge at Ithacs.

Ohlo State University has its star baseball combination working on the football team. They are H. H. Workman '24, pitcher, and R. J. Marts '24, first baseman. Individually and collectively, the Englishmen were mastered—not overwhemingly so, but sufficiently to make Ireland's success thoroughly deserved.

England's eleven confused five new caps, including A. G. Hayer and K. E. Hegan, amateurs who play for the Corinthians and the Army, respectively. In a recent trial game between the amateurs and professionals the pair had given an excellent display, particularly Bower, who had then practically England's accepted forward line to cope with, but against Ireland it would seem that neither man found his true game.

High hopes were pinned on J. Bradford of Birmingham, who, after performing the feat of scoring four goals for the English League against the Irish League last month, was thought likely to prove England's long awaited "ideal" center forward.

The only tangible proof of his ability Saturday was the opportunistic goal he scored after a corner kick by Hegan. The ball was headed in the wrong direction by a defender and in the subsequent melee Bradford steered it between the goalkeeper's legs. That occurred after some 10 minutes of play. Five minutes later, Ireland equalized through W. G. Gillespie, who played a stelling game for the winners. The ball came to him off the crossbar and he calmly headed it past the English goal-keper's econd half the Irishmen distinctly hald the unner hand. Eradford

The native population was despised and oppressed. There was no spised and oppressed. There was no provision for schools in the native languages, and consequently 97 per cent of the population before the revolution were illiterate. Natives were not permitted to serve in the army, because they were not trusted with arms.

Today all this is changed. Fifty thousand native children are already attending schools, and this is only the beginning of what we plan to do for education. We are organizing our own native army. Little by little the suffering, hard-working peasants of Turkestan are coming to feel that the land and the water with which they labor are their own possessions. General List of New York Stock Market Shows Weak Tone

Irregularly higher prices characterized the opening of today's New York stock market with a brisk demand noted for certain railroad shares. Gains of a point or more were registered by Norroik & Western, Hartman Corporation and Associated Dry Goods.

The main trend continued upward in the first half-hour with the best gains being registered in the equipments, independent steels, and merchandising issues.

Woolworth jumped four points to 269.

Foreign exchanges opened heavy in reflection of the disturbing political news from Germany.

The general list turned downward before noon because of the market's inability to absorb, except at concessions, the profit-taking sales of floor traders and the increased offerings or short interests.

Northern Pacific, New Haven, American Woolen, National Enameling, Kelly Springfield, United States Rubber first preferred and Goodrich Rubber preferred dropped 1 to 2 points.

Call money opened at 4½ per cent.

The reluctance to increase commitments on the long side of the market, in face of the persistent selling of special stocks, particularly the motor accessory shares, enabled the "bear" faction to carry the general list lower in the early afternoon. U. S. Rubber first preferred dropped four points, and a number of other industrial shares lost 1½ to 2½ points. Woolworth extended its rise to six points, touching 271.

Foreign Bonds Off

Foreign Bonds Off Week-end developments in Europe caused active selling in practically all foreign Government issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange in the early hours yesterday. The recessions, however, were not large. Norwegian bonds, recently released from syndicate protection, continued in supply, the sixes certificates of 1943 touching a new low.

Orders to buy somewhat exceeded those to sell in the railroad group. Although Kelly-Springfield 8s fell off 1½ to a new low, most of the other rubber to a new low, most of the other rubber company liens improved, as did also some of the sugar and chemical company issues. A few of the steel issues gave way fractionally. Active U. S. Bonds held steady.

STEEL INDUSTRY HAS REVIVAL OF HEAVIER BUYING

Increasing Sales Take Form of More Important Tonnages, Long Hoped For

NEW YORK, Oct. 22 (Special)—The revival of large tonnage business in-steel is the outstanding development of last week.

steel is the outstanding development of last week.

Although it had been felt during recent weeks that inquiries and sales were increasing over the dull summer menths, there was a lack of the olg business which shows that the leaders among the buying consumers consider the time opportune for purchasins.

The large tonnages come from the rairoads, builders and shipbuilders. The carriers are inquiring for mearly 300 locomotives, having formerly been intested chiefly in rails.

There are three large building projects in the east requiring more than 10,000 tons of steel each.

New ships number at least 10, and they, as well as the locomotives, will require large tonnages of steel plates, which have been specially depressed because of overexpansion during the war. Plate mills in the east have been operating at only 25 per cent capacity.

Baying by Railroads

The Missouri Pacific road is asking for 34 engines, the Southern Pacific 59.

The Missouri Pacific road is asking for 84 engines, the Southern Pacific 59, the Pennsylvania 52, the Louisville 8, Nashville 39, and the Baltimore & Ohio

Two building projects at Kearny, N. J., bids for which have not been formally asked, are: A power plant for the Public Service Commission of New Jersey, requiring 14,000 tons, and buildings for the Western Electric Company, taking more than 10,000 tons.

The New York Telephone Company will soon issue figures for additions, requiring 18,000 tons. For the last few weeks 4000 tons of fabricated steel has been the most required in a single order.

The Standard Transportation Company, subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company, has just ordered eight ships built, and the steel for the same, 6500 tons, has been placed with the Carnegle Steel Company. The Philadelphia A Reading has just bought 35,000 tons of rails, and the Pennsylvania railroad is about to divide orders for about 200,000 tons.

It is seldom that the weather interferes with steel making and recent conditions have been an unusual exception. Drought has caused the suspension of operations of some of the mills of the Pittsburgh district which make steel, and has affected plants in New Jersey which melt iron and steel and convert them to other products.

Pig Iron Dull and Weak

Pig Iron Dull and Weak
Business in pig iron is very quiet and still lower prices are expected. Prices are $9 a ton lower than the peak of the year in eastern Pennsylvania at $23 a ton. Buffalo iron can be had at $22, Alabama iron at $19@23, depending on delivery to the middle west or locally, Virginia iron at $24 and Chicăgo iron at $25. Sales of iron from the Pittsburgh district have been at a very low ebb. because of strenuous com-iron.

Sales of fabricated structural steel for September, as reported by the Government, fell 15,000 tons, standing at 132,500 tons, or at the rate of 53 per cent of shop capacity. However, October figures should be decidedly better.
The sheet-making capacity of the world on the thin gauges is practically sold out to Japan for temporary construction to rebuild devastated districts. This means that 100,000 tons have been placed, of which about 30,000 tons have been lodged with American mills.

Forsign Compatition

grand means that loo, out tons have been lodged with American mills.

Foreign Competition

Sellers report they could have sold five times as much if they could get the mills to accept the business.

Mills on the European continent are wible to underbid Americans on certain teems for Japan. Belgian mills will sell structural steel $12 a ton cheaper than Americans and nails about $1 a keg less than Americans and nails about $1 a keg less than Americans. Sheet prices, however, are on a parity.

Speaking of continental competition, a French plant obtained the order for furnishing 4000 tons of cast-iron pipe to Los Angeles, Cal., which is the first time in many months that a foreign goncern has won such a large contract here. However, the pipe makers are 50 busy that they will not suffer from loss of that particular order.

Attention in the monferrous metals has been focused on zinc, which was advancing daily by $1 a ton until the close of week, when a slight reaction look place. However, prices made a net gain of $4,a ton during the week. The upward movement was begun by purchasing of American zinc by the British, who have booked large contracts for galvanised sheets with Japan. Then domestic galvanisers and consumers came into the market fairly extensively. By the end of the week more producers were offering the metal at the higher price and hence the slight Pacition in prices took place.

Copper showed some improvement during the week and made a net gain of $5 c a minimum price of 127ac a pound. Some few sales were made at 32c, delivered, which price the producers have as a goal for the market.

ers have as a goal for the market.

Copper Production

It is strange that in view of overproduction of copper and prices, which are the lowest for a year and a half, some mines and smelters have not been closed, but on the contrary the tendency is to increase production, as the overhead cost must be reduced to offset the low selling price, some producers argue.

The Michigan copper mines are still looking for more labor. There are about 600 men employed in the five active copper mines in that region, compared with 16,000 men at the war-time peak. It had been expected that workmen would be released by this time from the automobile industry and go to the mines, but this has not taken place.

Lead has been slightly easier in the middle west, where saies were made early in the week at 6.50c, Bast St. Louis, but the low-priced seller at length withdrew from the market, so that the prevailing minimum at the end of the week was 6.55c. British prices have been rising of late due to labor troubles in the mines in Mexico, Spain, and Australia, and this has helped sentiment here.

The seldom that the weather interfores with-steel making and recent conditions have been an unusual exception. Drought has caused the suspension of operations of some of the mills of the Pittsburgh district, which make steel, and has affected plants in New Jersey which melt iron and steel and convert them to other products.

On Water Rations

Some of the Pittsburgh mills use water from the Shenango River and the low water has made it difficult for the boilers to operate correctly. Consequently certain mills of both the Carnegie Steel Company and the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company have been closed temporarily.

Jersey industrial plants have been placed on a water ration, which allows them to use only half normal requirements.

DAILY MAIL TRUST DEBENTURE ISSUE IS OVERSUBSCRIBED

LONDON, Oct. 22—So great was the flood of applications for £8,000,000 7 per cent debentures of the Daily Mail Trust Ltd., that the subscription lists were closed this morning at 10:50—50 minutes after the opening.

Prospectuses were available on Friday at 3:30 p. m., and by 5:30 p. m. £40,000,000 was on offer. It is estimated that this figure was doubled when applications from the public were received this morning, which would mean that the issue was subscribed at least 10 times over.

The result was not unexpected, for the rush to underwrite was "simply phenomenal," to use the phrase of one with long experience in these matters.

The Daily Mail Trust controls, not only The Daily Mail trust controls, not only The Daily Mail itself, but also The Daily Mirror, The Daily Sketch, The Evening, News, The Weekly Dispatch, The Sunday Pictorial and The Sunday Pictorial and The Sunday Pictorial and The Sunday Herald, all published in London, as well as several papers published in Manchester and Scotland and a number of neriodicals.

The prospectus hopes, however, to realize a profit of £2,500,000 for the current financial year.

In addition to the debentures, which were issued at 99 and are redeemable at 107 per cent between the years 1924-1947, there are 2,500,600 ordinary shares at £1 each, of which 2,000,000 have ued with two shillings a sh for the meteorologist and the navigator rather than for the engineer. There is a distinction, furthermore, in that landings are not forced instantaneously by storm. There is customarily enough warning, when such obstacles to continued flight are near at hand, to make it possible to continue to a regular landing field near a city where easy surface transportation can be found if necessary. In any case, landings due to weather are very rare, and where the airplane is any case, landings due to weather are very rare, and where the airplane is equipped with radio apparatus for the receipt of storm warnings and information making it possible to change the course and pass around the disturbance they should be virtually non-existent. Only the stoppage of an engine can force an absolutely engine can force an absolutely den termination of a flight wherever the airplane may be at the mo-

So far as the engine itself, in its structural parts, is concerned, the first two causes can be practically in its structural parts, is concerned, the first two causes can be practically disregarded in modern engines. Actual breakage of a part is almost at rare now in the engine as in the airplane, and there is not the slightest reason why there should ever be a single case. The valve troubles which used to be so serious, too, have been overcome by the use of valves of a special alloy steel better adapted to the operating conditions and the high temperatures which prevail in the cylinders than were the materials previously employed for the purpose.

Isnition system failures still make some trouble on airplanes; as they do on automobiles and motor boats spark plugs being the commonest offeaders, but most airplane engines are now equipped with two complete and independent ignition systems, and there is no evidence of trouble in the running of the engine until both magnetos, or both spark plugs in a sin.

It has been shown conclusively and repeatedly, both by the experience of American air services and by that of European commercial lines, that the proportion of forced landings to hours of operation with a given type of engine may vary tenfold as between different stations or maintenance different stations or maintenance crews. transportation found to permit the completion of the journey.

An airplane, operating at ordinary commercial speed, is capable of traveling from New York to Chicago in little over eight hours. The fastest trains take 20 hours for the same journey. It is conceivable, however, that the airplane might be forced down in a place where it would take two hours to reach a railroad line and another 24 to get to the destination after a train came along. The business man often finds himself unable to take even a small risk of great delay, and he may have to prefer the train-to an airplane which makes the journey in half the train's time 199 times out of 200 and in double the surface time on the other occasion.

Reliability is the first essential of increased success. The closest study must be given to the causes of forced descents, and every effort made to eliminate those causes.

Virtually all such descents are due either to the weather or to engine

Virtually all such descents are due either to the weather or to engine trouble. The two problems are quite distinct, for the avoidance of delays due to bad weather conditions is one for the meteorologist and the navingator rather than for the engineer. into the future, to the time when in creasing traffic will demand really big machines, we may take the case of a 10-engined machine carrying 60 passengers and able to operate with any three of its engines stopped. On the same route, and without assuming any improvement in the reliability of individual engines, the chance of forced landing is reduced to one in 300,000,-000, a degree of reliability far beyond anything that has ever been attained on railroads, dependent as they are on a single locomotive.

In brief summary, then, it may be said that the chance of mechanical trouble is small even now, so small, with proper maintenance, that it is no ground for serious concern, but that constant gains are being made and that the time of 100 per cent performance in commercial flying is not far The air mail has already beaten 98 per cent over considerable lengths of time, using single-engined machines of war-time design. It is amazing that they should have survived their vicissitudes with so much freshness and completeness. Among the largest and most important relics of the heroic age of English decoration, these paintings will command the admiration of many and provide rich reward to those who make the miscrimes to see them. the pilgrimage to see them.

I have laid stress on the name of William Bakers stress on the name of William Baker because for most people there is so much in a name. VISIT to Eton College is ever a delight. A new discovery there will give art lovers further resson for an excursion. The wall paintings which now see the light of day, after having been covered over since 1847, are the finest productions of fitteenth century art in England. Mr. Tristram, of whom I have written before in the Monitor, in connection with restoration of medieval painting in Westminster Abbey, is responsible for the work at Eton.

Fortunate it is that the name of the artist is preserved in the college records. It was William Baker who executed these superh decorations between 1479 and 1488. He was an Englishman, and this is important, for he is thus one more link in the chain of evidence, which I have constantly averred is there for the searching, that in England a live school of painting existed prior to the eighteenth century, in spite of so many erroneous statements to the contrary. Further proof of this no doubt will be given at the forthcoming exhibition of English primitives at the Royal Academy.

To return to William Baker, his lively frescoes were whitewashed over during Elizabeth's reign and suffered entire obscurity in 1700 by having walnocoting placed over them. In 1847, however, they came to light the state of the candidate of the college of the college of the side of a tent, with an acrobat on a trapeze. It is a subject beloved of Sickert, but never has he so intensely conveyed atmosphere with such simple means.

Its shows have often contained much that has helped to establish the "modern" painter in England as a man who has much to say about the inner content of things rather than their mere outward appearances. What is one to say, then, when such disappointment as the present show gives cause for complaint that a society of painters, who have lead to expect of the Academy?

Art in Dress

T IS astonishing that, with the increased and decidedly self-conscious interest in the decorative arts, so little has as yet been made of the art of dress. Here and there a class or a school is devoted to teaching it both theoretically and practically, and designers for great commercial firms have discovered the advantage to themselves of study in museums. But far less attention is paid to the costumes we wear than to the details of the houses in which we parade them, though a woman's ill-designed gown or a man's tweed coat and trousers can make discord

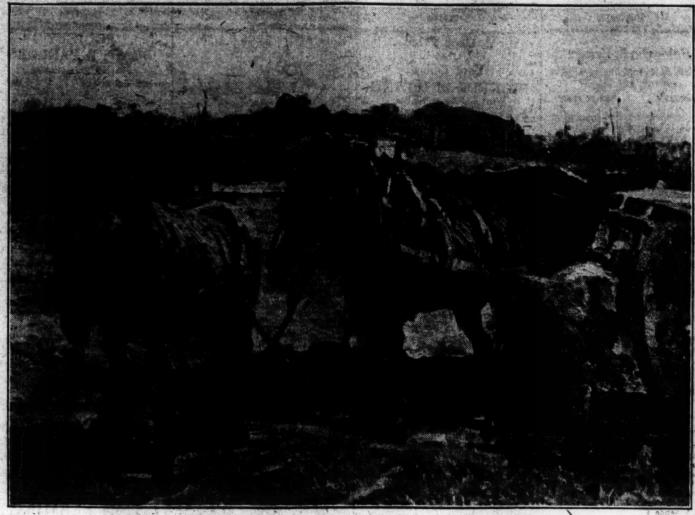

Every now and then a protest is heard. Few such are more amusing than a recent controversy in The London Times as to the merits of the "straight lines" now in vogue for women. The correspondent who women. The correspondent who started the controversy seemed over-whelmed by the untruth as well as the ugliness of these lines in contrast with the truth and the grace of the curves of other days. Now, there are curves and curves, and I think few lovers of Renaissance and that of our own day, leading me often to think that if the practice of artists signing their pictures was abandoned, much more attention would be paid by critics and public to the work and not to names, and painters would show less of the obsession in which their signatures of Queen Elizabeth as Zucchere. tume of Queen Elizabeth as Zucchero

As he is an artist and the book is illustrated, it might reasonably be expected to supply an argument one way or the other. But Mr. Furniss does not help, either in his text or his drawings, to explain anything very much relating to the women of the period. Both text and drawings are sketchy. The curves added nothing to the beauty which is an essential of daily life, and they gave nothing to the artist, though more than one did what he could with them, as you can see in many portraits painted by distinguished painters during that misguided interval. Beauty is in surdity or a caricature. Beauty is in long, flowing lines rather than in contorted curves and a stiff silhouette. Russian Artists in New York

NEW YORK, Oct. 17-Two distinguished Russian artists are arriving in New York this week to swell the already considerable throng of Muscovites now domiciled here. Alek-sandr Arkhipenko is a passenger of the S.S. Mongolia, coming from Berlin where he has resided since 1919. Al-though he has passed the greater part of his career in Paris, he is essentially one of the modern Russians and was represented at the large exhibition of contemporary Russian art shown at the Brooklyn Museum last winter.

Boris Grigoriev, the well-known Russian painter, is the other addition to the Russian colony of New York. He comes for the first time to the United States under the auspices of the New Gallery, where an exhibition of his paintings was held last year. He was also an exhibitor in the Brook-lyn show. Throughout the war and the revolution in Russia, he remained impressions.

"Another thing I try to acquire is color. Brittany is one of the most colorful places in the world, because the sea breezes carry away the heavy aimosphere and leave a clear blue sky. In the south of France the anishine is so brilliant that the light is more white or rather more milky and diffused, and it eats up the local culor; while here the scolor in the boats and sails and clothing of the men is not on y rich in itself, but men is not on y rich in itself, but the atmosphere helps it. The peas-ants of Brittany are verifable poets, with their great love of color and sentiment."

Mr. Thompson then showed some of his larger pictures. If he is ambitious to achieve movement and color, he is most successful. In his work is no unnecessary detail—really no detail at all. Facts are placed on canvas with a firm loaded brush and a sure stroke. This gives the effect of change. The clouds fly past, the boats rock in rippling water, while the men, painted in the simplest masses, are moving about at their tasks.

Ships and Horses

His subjects are mostly the life of the harbor under all weather conditions; luminous gray days with the fishermen's clothes giving contrasting notes of color; heavy, leaden days with a feeling of mist in the air, and shany days with green and red-brown boats rigged with orange sails, or the harbor touched with the last rays of the sun giving a golden-bronze effect to the canvas.

Another subject which fascinates Mr. Thompson is horses, standing on the quays while their carts are being loaded with fish; heavy patient beasts whose broad flanks reflect both the light from the sunlit pavement and the sky above.

When I remarked on the great variety of subjects and their different treatment. Mr. Thompson said, "I always go out to paint, without any preconceived ideas—with a mind open to fresh impressions.

"It is more stimulating and one's sense is keener to atmospheric differences. One can never tell just what nic, I try for none. I am extremely careful to mix my colors as little as possible; two colors, sometimes three, seldom four, because if the pigments are kept pure, there is less likely to back to my home in New Zealand. be a chemical action which produces

Mr. Thompson's ability to grasp a strong impression and then to transmit it swiftly and boldly to canvas gives his work individuality, distinction, and beauty.

Some of our clients have used them instead of side chairs, with a walnut refectory table, and carved walnut arm chairs at each end. Au Quatrieme has at this moment an exceptionally fine collec-

HOME FORUM

The Rewards of a Tent-Dweller

My surroundings, fortunately, do not show such violent contrasts, and they do not induce such rapt, ecstatic states of soul, but I, too, am a tent-dweller not only through the soft summer season but on into the seducvacation crowds swarm back to the hives of the city. My canvas castle looks out over the ocean, a much pleasanter waste than the des-ert, and is perfectly sheltered by red manles and nursle beches which maples and purple beeches, which subtly transmute the rays of the sun into a thousand delicate shades. Behind me busy trains run with a pleasant muffled rumble, a kind of symbol of the background of the civilization on which I literally turn my back. Before me rolls the everlasting, ever-changing sea.

I am not, be it emphatically said, a camper. No frying pans, coffeepots charred embers, or disheveled "kits" litter my virgin greensward. I do not litter my virgin greensward. I do not like black gnats or sand flies, or the sluggish choking smoke of green wood camp fires which is supposed—quite mythically—to drive them away. I eat and sleep in an orthodox cottage hard by, but I live in my tent—a true tent-dweller.

Here I am monarch and high priest, without tyranny and without bigotry, and my combined court and sanctuary stands open to all who come without guile. Bee, wasp, and many another less well-armed insect strays in and out on busy quest, welcome and un-molested (all, indeed, except the mosquito, who, I must admit, never come with good intent). A big black spider builds a delightfully wicked lair in an intersection of my tent poles, just on purpose to lay by the heels any files which I find superfluous. Perpetual music is furnished by the choir of birds that sing with an incredibly inexhaustible joy in the trees all

In one of Carlyle's most unforgetable, burning passages in "Heroes and Hero Worship" he describes the environment of the Arabs as the influence shaping their character and religion. "Consider that wide waste horizon of sand," he bids us, "empty, silent, like a sand-sea, dividing habitable place from habitable. You are all alone there, left alone with the universe; day by day a fierce sun blazing down on it with intolerable radiance; by night the great deep heaven with its stars." And he goes on to show how Muhammad's thought was molded by living amid tiny green oases, surrounded by the desert.

I hesitate to introduce the stanza which continu-ally inspires more violent controversy than any other lines in the whole range of the poetry of the Romantic Movement, and which are so open to distressing misinterpretation. But we shall gain nothing by ignoring the profoundest statement of the influence of nature which came out of that movement. The spectral tree towers above all, a cloud of pink and white. Its branches bend earthwards, so that the great outspreading mass of flowers walted. On the ample fields a month's stubble great outspreading above the glaring lights and the restless sea of a thousand upturned faces, the old tree looks like a phantom. Its vitality, moreover, is wonderful, for its bloss-somm never fail. Men have been accustomed to seek this enlarged coast; this higher opportunity, in multifold ways; and invariably, as they have sought materially, their course has ultimately been brought to an end in a blind alley. Too frequently men believe that their only hope of greater opportunity lies in a different occupation from the one in which they find themselves. They argue that they have never really wanted to do the kind of work in which they are engaged; that there is no possible advancement for them in this work; that they are the victims of circumstance; and that they can never achieve a greater measof freedom until they are able to perform different and more congenial work. Or, perchance, they believe that their opportunity lies in another country. From a tumultuous Europe they may look with longing eyes toward the freedom of another land; or from a cold eastern state they may look wistfully to a southern clime, where the exigencies of life and the demands upon character are, however, just as inevorable as anywhere else Always they are duped by the mirage that somewhere there is a country that is fairer, a climate that is kindlier, a people that are less difficult than their own neighbors and associates, a life that is, withal, less rigorous. The divinely accurate Science of Christianity alone offers the solution for this age-long problem of greater freedom and of higher opportunity. On page 265 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Mrs. Eddy has written, "This scientific sense of being, forsaking matter for Spirit, by no means suggests man's absorption into Delty and the loss of his identity, but confers upon man enlarged individuality, a wider sphere of thought and action, a more expansive love, a higher and more permanent peace." Progress in Christian Science is always orderly. It always starts from the point of seeking opportunity spiritually instead of materially. It begins by seeking the direction and support of harmony, of unity with the Father, through spiritual understanding. Thus will there be assured a thousandfold greater certainty of success and true achievement in the thing to be undertaken; thus will the thing at hand be performed in a manner which will unfold a greater and higher sense of opportunity.

The novice in the study of Christian Science may say: But what shall I do? I cannot go around thinking about God all of the time. He will gradually learn that the power of the Christian Scientist to commune intelligently and confidently with God, to hear God speak plainly, is the result of earnest study of the Bible and the Christian Science textbook. On page 456 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "A Christian Scientist requires my work Science and Health for his textbook, and so do all his students and patients. Why? First: Because it is the voice of Truth to this age, and contains the full statement of Christian Science, or the Science of healing through Mind."

From the pages of Science and Health one learns, through the orderly unfoldment of true consciousness, how to pray without ceasing, without effort, and with joy. Continuous prayer, increasing our understanding of the unity of good, will manifest itself in ways that will acclaim themselves to us as an enlarged coast. It may remove the seeker for Truth to a distant shore: it may bring him to a position of greater responsibility and activity where he is; it may increase his income; it may secure him an harmonious home; it may establish more satisfying relations with his fellow men. But communion with God-prayer-will continue to be his greatest and happiest opportunity. He will turn to God with the happy trust voiced in a verse of the one hundred and twenty-third psalm: "Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress: so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until that he have mercy upon us."

EDITORIALS

THE Imperial Conference of the Prime Ministers of the British Commonwealth has now been in session for British Imperial Policy more than a fortnight, but no very definite results appear to have yet been reached. That is not surprising. The statesmen of the Empire seldom have been called upon to face a more difficult or a more complex problem. Of all the nations involved in the Peace Conference, Great Britain has been the most loyal to the settlement made at Paris. After the initial mistake of yielding to the clamor for excessive reparations, the policy both of Mr. Lloyd George himself and his successors has been steadily in favor of bringing peace and appearement to Europe by methods of moderation and reconciliation. British policy has stood for the reduction of the reparations claims to whatever figure experts adjudged Germany could pay, and for the adjustment of as many of Europe's problems as possible through the League of Nations.

Few can deny, however, that that policy has failed, whether attempted by Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Bonar Law, or by Mr. Baldwin. It has foundered on a double rock. In the first place, to be successful, it required the active co-operation of the United States, which the presidential election of 1020 denied. In the second place, it required a corresponding sentiment in France and Germany, which it did not find. Germany has fallen under the domination of the great industrialists who have been determined to evade performance of the Treaty by ruining Germany's currency to the great personal profit of themselves. France, believing that Great Britain was more interested in restoring European trade upon which the employment of her people depended than in obtaining reparations or security for herself, has decided to take the law into her own hands and to seize the Ruhr as a pledge both for security and reparations.

These are the facts with which the Conference of Premiers finds itself faced, and surely the solution is not easy. The British Government itself has given no very definite lead. Two streams of policy seem to have found expression among the overseas delegates. The one has been represented by General Smuts, who has pressed for the formulation by the conference of a comprehensive scheme for the settlement of Europe, which in turn can be urged on France, Italy, and the other powers. No authoritative news, however, has yet come through as to the nature of the proposals which General Smuts has in view. The other has been represented by Mr. Mackenzie King, who has pressed what may be called a more American view, that Europe for the moment is so hopelessly engulfed in the hatreds and strife engendered by the war that useful intervention is for the time being impracticable. But while Mr. King advocates the withdrawal of Great Britain from participation in Europe's affairs, he does not seem to have put forward any proposal for filling up that gap in Europe's markets which is the prime cause of unemployment in England and of low prices for wheat in Canada.

Whatever policy the Imperial Conference may arrive at, the chief difficulty will be to make it effective. For the moment the control of events in Europe seems to be in the hands of France and Germany, and Great Britain can do little save exert moral suasion in support of the policy the Empire favors. The truth would seem to be that time is still needed for the appeasement of those feelings of hatred roused by the war which are the real obstacle to settlement and peace. The war overthrew the great military autocracies of central and eastern Europe, but it did not train the liberated peoples in democracy, and it left behind it a mass of hatred, fear and suspicion.

Moreover, practically every nation has reacted from the idea of international co-operation. The instinct to get away from the war and all its associations has been too strong. They did not realize, and they have not yet fully realized, that just as the war against autocracy could not be won without the co-operation of all the civilized world, so the struggle for world peace and stability will not be won until the whole civilized world begins to co-operate again. But the mists of hatred and fear and indifference are slowly lifting. More and/more people are seeing every day that neither peace nor prosperity for any nation can be achieved along present lines, and that a change in attitude toward other nations must everywhere be made. When that process has gone a little farther the international skies may clear more quickly than now seems likely. Even if the Imperial Conference in itself is unable to bring about a solution, the sincere and honest way in which it seems to be going about its work will definitely help that educational process which will ultimately lead to stability and peace.

THE people of the United States will regard appreciatively the efforts of the National Parks Association to "Keep the Quality Up" maintain the present high standard fixed for reservations which are entitled to the designation of national parks. Warning is given that at the forthcoming session of Congress efferts will be made to obtain Government appropriations for a number of new areas which do not qualify under the specifications heretofore adhered to in setting apart these public reservations. In this movement to increase the number of national parks friends of the system see indications of a return to the "pork-barrel" tacties so long and so successfully employed in raids upon the national Treasury by exploiters of dry waterways and tideless national parks. The latter cannot be evolved or manufactured by any known legislative process. It is altogether probable that this paternalistic method, painstakingly administered, may serve to preserve and even to rehabilitate sparsely-timbered forest areas. The experimental policy has been generally approved. But when it comes to legislating into existence a natural park or playground comparable to those already established, the proposed method is certainly questionable. The processes of reproduction remain to be discovered.

There should remain the clear distinction between forest reserves, so called, and the more pretentious

Opposed to this threatened raid by ambitious representatives and senators, the people as a whole should stand as a unit. The standard of excellence has been fixed, and there should be no departure from it. But there is another point of attack of which warning has been given. It is the apparent determination of those who favor the utilization of latent water-power resources in the established reservations, and the diversion of this energy to private enterprises, to renew this campaign, long opposed by the National Parks Association. There is possibly a middle ground which might safely be taken in considering this plan. The economic advantage to industries and the consequent benefits to the public which might be realized through the intelligent and wiselydirected conservation of water now practically wasted cannot be denied. But any proposed utilization which would result in detracting from the scenic beauties of the parks will be strenuously opposed. Of this there is no doubt.

Yet mere sentiment or stubborn adherence to a fixed ethical code should not prevent the striking of a fair balance. The benefits should be measured against prejudice. It is hard to estimate just what constitutes a million dollars' worth of scenery. It is not so difficult to show by actual computation what will produce a milion dollars' worth of hydroelectric power.

THE twelfth anniversary of the birth of the Chinese Republic has been marked by the election of Tsao Kun as President. The northern Tsao Kun as China's Chief as President. The northern Marshal succeeds Li Yuan-hung, who, it may be remembered, fled from the capital to Tientsin at the time of last June's so-called "police disorders," there to abdicate, and, as it proved, leave the country without a chief executive for more than three months, since it was not possible to gather a quorum of the Parliament to hold a new election. Through the Occidental world, where information as to the antique Orient is often casual and usually inaccurate, it was the picturesque nonessentials of this happening which attracted attention. When, for instance, the Chihli tuchun took his seat in the presidential chair, comment hastened to emphasize that he had risen from the ranks; that before he had taken to soldiering, indeed, he had been no more than a push-cart man in the city's streets. Most of all was it dwelt upon that his election had been characterized by bribery, gross and open even for China.

These are matters only of passing interest to students of the Far Eastern complex. The queries which such observers see to be pressing most insistently for answer are rather these: Can Tsao Kun hold on to the exalted position to which he has climbed? If so, then what policies, domestic and foreign, are to stand index to his régime? In brief: Is he at last the man able to put an end to Chinese chaos, political and financial?

The bribery of the electoral college (and testimony as to that seems conclusive) bears closely on this. Seventy-four of the 590 who attended have issued a formal statement as to what was done of this sort, and Sun Yat-sen makes official declaration from Canton that a mass of other confirmatory evidence is in his hands. Unfortunately, it is exactly the thing to be least doubted, for it has long been characteristic of Chinese public life. The vicious habit had attained there an unenviable development generations before English "rotten boroughs" had been heard of, or American ward bosses, or Spanish rotativists. Local leaders, then, might take it all as only customary, or even unavoidable, while "things went their way," but will not an active and jealous opposition seize on this as excuse to attack Tsao Kun and his supporters?

If, in other words, that gentleman did pay, out of the vast private fortune he accumulated as military governor, some $10,000,000 to establish himself as the country's Chief Executive, has he not "bought a lawsuit"?-or to fit the phrase to Asiatic habit, a civil war? Why is Dr. Sun, who received, by-the-by, thirty-three of the 513 votes cast, conscripting coolies and levying extraordinary taxes if not to take the field? He has, indeed, invited Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria to join him in "a punitive expedition" whch is to reach down from the President's self to whatever members of Parliament supported his candidacy. Now, if this menace materializes, can Tsao Kun, for all his firm grip of the military forces of the middle provinces, maintain himself in office? Possibly it might still better be put: Does Gen. Wu Pei-fu stand with Tsao Kun? In that case, North and South could find themselves with the little end of the argument in their

Then, in such event, the second question would arise: What policies may we expect to see developed by this "strong-handed harmonizer"? In his entirely conventional inauguration address the new President declared himself determined to fulfill China's foreign obligations and pay her debts, to set final period to banditry, cut the army down to a mere national police force, and bring about general financial economies. Especially did he hope to "establish harmony among the provinces"—and there are those in Peking who say this last item portends that Tsao-Kun has won over General Wu, who is forthwith to be supported in his "Unification by Force"

All these matters are of such importance to the Yellow Republic, and several of them to the rest of the world, too, that one hesitates to say which is of largest value. Each seems an inescapable essential. But each, again, offers tremendous difficulty in the attainment, present-day China being what it is. Can President Tsao, admitting that he is a forceful leader (but not forgetting that he is described as quite lacking in political shrewdness), work his way down through such a list? One may hope, at the very least. And let it be added that in one particular, if no more, this latest one of the land's chieftains starts off well; his term opens with the promulgation of that long-discussed Constitution. The document may be immature, lopsided even, as is affirmed, it yet is more than any of Tsao Kun's predecessors have had to lean upon.

Studios are opening again in the towns, summer colonies of artists are breaking up, and presently we shall be seeing in exhibitions the latest work of Provincetown and Gloucester and the many other little groups of the kind scattered through the United States. It is probably what sociologists call the herd mind that prompts artists to work thus in company.

Artist Colonies, Their Charm and Danger

But the classic example, the basis and model of all modern artist colonies, is Barbizon. This is a good moment of the year for artists to ask themselves what advantages and disadvantages their summer herding gives them, and they cannot consider the question very long before they will discover just how they differ from the Barbizon group in aims and results.

The Barbizon men went to live in the village on the outskirts of the forest of Fontainebleau far more because they were friends who sought and found inspiration in each other's society than because they were preoccupied with the same theories, or bent on the same brand of revolt, or carrying out the same technical schemes. They were alike in finding their subjects in the forest or the neighboring plain, for they were mostly landscape painters. Even Millet, if he were more concerned with the peasants at their daily task, or prayer, or rest, made his figures so a part of the landscape that they seem hardly less an essential feature in it than the trees that shadow them or the fields where they sow and reap. And yet, despite the close companionship and similarity of subject, each saw the world with his own eyes and developed an individual style to express the beauty his eyes revealed to him. There is no mistaking Millet for Diaz, Rousseau for Troyon. If they were alike in the choice of a painting ground, they could not have been more unlike in the pictures they got out of it.

This is hardly true of the American artist colonies or, for that matter, the English. Each seems to give its stamp, its hall mark, to all the work produced by its members. In the Royal Academy at one time it was easy to know a Newlyn or St. Ives picture on sight, though, without the catalogue, anything but easy to say which Newlyn or St. Ives artist painted it. Now, in American exhibitions, to those familiar with them, a Provincetown or Gloucester picture is almost as easily recognized at a glance. Artists can learn from each other; to many work in common means inspiration. But to copy, however unconsciously, another man's subject and style is to be dominated, not to be inspired, by him. The danger of these colonies today is that the groups who live together are apt to share each other's mannerisms and methods until it is difficult to distinguish one man's work from another's. It is as if the herd mind. that led them to settle in flocks, forced them also to standardize their art, and in hardly anything is individuality so absolutely indispensable as in art.

Editorial Notes

What the vice-chancellor of Oxford University said to the delegates who met recently in the hall of Balliol College, regarding the opportunity which they had to revive the student life of Europe, must have sunk deep into the hearts and minds of many present. "Among the private agencies (making for international co-operation) none is more likely to be efficacious than the Confédération Internationale des Etudiants," he said. He urged that there is a certain camaraderie between the students of different countries which is most important in cementing the sympathy and accord between the nations. And he spoke of their purpose as "noble, beautiful, and almost holy." Such a welcome the visitors should remember for many a day, and it will doubtless add its quota toward solving the tangle of Europe's

So MUCH importance was placed in press dispatches on the proposed merger of the Congregational and Presbyterian churches as indorsed at the meeting of the National Council of Congregational Churches in conference at Springfield, Mass., that the report of the council's commission on prohibition hardly received any attention. It was, however, decidedly noteworthy, for the commission called upon all churches to urge action by legislators in favor of the temperance cause. It also recommended that the true facts concerning prohibition be kept clearly and continuously before the people, "thus building up a sentiment which by its basis in truth and by firm insistence shall overcome the enthusiasm of a thirsty and noisy minority."

GERMS had better look to their laurels, if we may believe the latest news items regarding the attempts which are being made to unearth the more elusive members of this fraternity. Two Paris doctors are said to have discovered a heretofore unknown measles microbe, while two physicians of the department of hygiene and bacteriology at the University of Chicago are hot on the trail of the "dominant" germ of colds. It all sounds very impressive, but unfortunately publicity of this nature concerning theoretical products of so-called laboratory work does far more harm than the most imposing array of militant microbes could ever do.

Sedentary New England

It is a widespread American impression—conviction, one should say—that the rural population of New England is sedentary. It is a matter of record that for sixty years this population has suffered serious depletion by emigration to western farms and to cities. This is amply proven by the statistics which show just how many of the residents of each state were born in each other state. But no census report has ever indicated the number of inhabitants of any state who are returned natives, or descendants of natives. Any illumination on this matter must come from personal observation and it is my experience that an astonishing number of New Englanders have returned to the old home after residence elsewhere, and that the number of returned descendants is fast becoming important.

We should bear in mind that New England has until lately put forth no propaganda to attract immigration. Such propaganda has the double effect of gaining new people and retaining the old population. The great western advertising campaign has greatly abated, but it was a mighty thing once. States, railway companies, towns, land companies, sent out "literature," speakers, exhibits. But the most powerful influence in drawing settlers was the spontaneous outburst of joy of living, finding expression in celebrations of the advantages and delights of the new home. That so many New Englanders have stolen away from populations proclaiming theirs the finest land the sun shines on, and have slunk back to New England, is surprising.

A New Mexican, brought up in the central west, I came back to the New Hampshire farm, which has been ours nearly a century. At the first harvest I had a crew of nine. Remarking that the dog at my heels had lately come from Arizona with my sister's family, a young fellow from across the Pemigewasset said he, too, had recently returned from Arizona. That started the rest; two had lived in California, one each in Idaho, Kansas, and Nebraska. We then ran over the list of the seventeen farms which were classable as being in our vicinity, and found a farm owned by a man who, with his two sons, had returned from California lately; one who, as a young man, had lived in Minnesota; one who had lived in both Minnesota and California in youth; one whose two sons. man-grown, had been born in Chicago; a Luxembourger, a Frenchman (France, not Canada), a man from Melrose, and a man from Cambridge, suburbs of Boston, Mass. Things have changed since then, of course. I have myself gone west and returned again. The two city men have gone. Two who had never been away have gone to California, and a family from Arkansas and one from Wisconsin have moved in, and stayed, and one has moved from Wisconsin, and gone again.

In September, I spent a day with a young man carrying on a state-wide Farm Bureau membership drive, chaperoning him in my town. The first man we called on came from Somerville, a Boston suburb, and in boyhood had lived in a country strange for a Yankee—Portugal. The second was a city man, city now forgotten by me. The third, after years of ranching in Wyoming, was on his father's farm. The fifth came from England two years ago. The seventh said: "Here I am, looking down Asquam Lake, and I have been round the Horn, logged mahogany in Ecuador, was in Panama before the Americans came, was twelve years in Montana, bossed a gold mine in Colorado, lived in San Francisco."

The young man was the son of parents born on Tenney Hill, in Hebron, had been nine years in business in New York City, and knows all our great cities. He is an orchardist in Boscawen. He said: "This drive shows me this State is going to be rebuilt by its returning grandchildren. I am surprised to find such numbers of them and such fine people—city people, college people—who have come back here, going into apples especially. We could sell all our apples in old England alone. I sell many of mine in Milwaukee. South Dakota would buy all the State now raises."

I won't stop to tell of three more returned Rocky Mountain folks encountered at this time. I have given fair samples of what you can find all over New England.

The day after Labor Day we formed an association to promote the State's lake district. Laconia presented for president. Mr. James R. Irwin, a native of Boston, and five years away. Of the seven men who spoke, all wool men know Mr. Follett of Boston, and som know Mr. Bossom of Boston and Mr. Black of Concord, Mass., now identified with New Hampshire. Everybody who sells shoes knows Thomas Plant, of the United Shoe Machinery Company, but does not know he has spent probably $2,000,000 on lands and buildings on Lake Minnesota, and is "crazy about New Hampshire." He is only one of the seldom mentioned millionaire contingent in the State, not exactly returned sons, but a tremendous factor in pushing the State along. Someone will say, "Attorney-General Young and Mr. Hobbs of Wolfeboro, are two New Hampshire men who spoke that night." Ah, but no. Mr. Hobbs, whom everybody in the State knows, for he has been and is a power, was born, strange to say, in Minnesota. Alexandre Faribault was the big man out there when he was

They do come back to New England. Not disparaging the western country they have left, not glorifying the country to which they have returned. Somewhat deprecatingly and apologetically they come, but they come, and now that Maine and Vermont have begun a vigorous campaign of repatriation, and New Hampshire is about to follow, they will come faster.

Wild Life and Good Sportsmanship

With the coming of the "open" season on game and the annual march of an army of hunters into the woods to indulge in what, if sport, is, to say the least, one-sided sport, one reads with more than usual interest this extract from an editorial in the Lewiston (Me.) Evening Journal:

the Lewiston (Me.) Evening Journal:
"In a little while, now, the laws of Maine will permit persons to go about in the woods and fields of Maine with firearms, and to shoot to kill. . . .

"I would like to put in a word in advance for the little creatures that fly, and run, and live their little lives in our woods and along our streams.

"The only appeal that will be worth while is to say this, 'Be a sportsman.' A good sportsman is a silent, kindly, contemplative man. He regards the presence of nature as the chief thing in his experience, and perhaps he would rather see a brood of partridge with their mother, or a mother duck hovering her tiny brood, than to blaze into them and see red in doing it. He selects his quarry, and shoots only to a purpose. . . .

"I love men who love the woods; the companionship of guns and rifles; who know the way to load a canoe; how to pole up stream; how to ride rapids; how to pitch a tent; how to sit by the fire for hours and say nothing. But I despise the killer—the murderous slaughterer of every living thing."
